

EDITORIAL

Dear Members of the Editorial Board, editing assistants, readers, authors, reviewers, and other users, we are pleased to present the third issue of 2021 (vol.6, n.3, 2021) of the Brazilian Journal of Public and International Policies (RPPI). Satisfied to be able to publish another volume despite the challenges imposed by the pandemic in 2020 and 2021 and institutional instabilities. Despite operational problems that affected our system for receiving articles and finding able and willing reviewers for the activity (unpaid and in times of overload of work) we completed the 2021 volumes. Victory in the face of so many challenges.

RPPI's proposal is to become a means of academic-scientific dissemination with an interdisciplinary profile, leading the academic community, researchers, students, and other interested parties to a contemporary debate on themes associated and integrated with public policies and international cooperation.

Since 2020, RPPI has had articles published in two languages, Portuguese, in addition to Spanish or English, at the discretion of the authors. Thus, we began to meet the criteria of internationalization, accessibility and greater dissemination of scientific works published in the RPPI. In the same sense, the journal's new system allows access in three languages (Portuguese, English, and Spanish), meeting the same criteria for access to authors, readers, and international dissemination of both the journal and the published articles. We hope with these improvements to increase the reach of our publications and meet the criteria of records and indexing bases of national and international academic and scientific productions (Web of Science, Scopus, Scimago, h-index, among others).

This is the last issue of 2021 and the last issue under my responsibility as Editor-in-Chief of RPPI. After a period of 4 years in front of the journal, I say goodbye to this role, passing the baton to Prof. Anderson Rafael Nascimento. I need to thank the editors associated with the lines of cooperation and management and public policies that followed the work during this period. A special mention must be made of the editorial assistants: Samuel Spellmann, Luan Nascimento, Polianna Almeida Portela and Aline Cristina Resende Mota, because without the editorial assistants it would be impossible to manage a journal. It is the end of a cycle of arduous work and learning, but also of good achievements.

That said, I present, together with the other editors and editorial assistants, volume 03 of 2021 of the Brazilian Journal of Public and International Policies, wishing you all a good reading.
